

Miles Davis with Sonny Stitt

Live at the Olympia
Oct. 11th, 1960

Mastered in DSD256

This recording captures a notable performance by jazz legends Miles Davis and Sonny Stitt at the Olympia Theater in Paris, France. The concert took place on October 11, 1960, and was part of Miles Davis's European tour.

At the time of this recording, Miles Davis was a highly influential figure in jazz, known for his groundbreaking work in various styles, including bebop, cool jazz, and modal jazz. Sonny Stitt, a renowned saxophonist, was a prominent figure in the bebop and hard bop movements.

The concert at the Olympia Theater showcased both musicians' exceptional improvisational skills and their unique approaches to jazz. The recording features a mix of original compositions and jazz standards, providing a platform for both Davis and Stitt to showcase their virtuosity.

The interplay between Miles Davis's trumpet and Sonny Stitt's saxophone is a highlight of the recording. Davis's playing often featured his trademark muted trumpet sound and his characteristic phrasing, while Stitt's saxophone playing demonstrated his technical prowess and melodic inventiveness.

The recording "Miles Davis and Sonny Stitt Live at the Olympia" offers a glimpse into an important moment in the careers of both musicians. It captures their artistic chemistry and showcases their individual improvisational talents, making it a valuable addition to the discography of both artists.
