Lightness OF BEING

A Show & Sale of JewelArt

As we continue to meander through the tricks and tribulations of a rapidly evolving environment, I am happy to find that all of us are getting more sensitised to the nuances of all the things that we surround ourselves with.

This is my 5th fine jewelry sale and show; and with every year and every edit, I am constantly seeking to highlight the various nuances of fine jewelry making. Little details that might be unseen, but contribute to the overall beauty and wearability of the jewel.

Light and Lightness are two such nuances that I personally examine closely when I hold a piece of jewelry.

Light - The most captivating aspect of the diamond and many precious gem stones. It is this play of light within the any stone that sparks our imagination. When worn, it illuminates the wearer - both physically and metaphorically speaking.

Lightness - This refers to the weight or weightlessness of the jewel. For many pieces, especially diamond jewels - I love a sense of weightlessness and minimal metal. Jewels that you can barely feel when you wear them.

And on the other hand, I equally love the feeling of dense gold against my skin - a heavy necklace, a weighty ring holding a gorgeous gem in its center. When the maker of the jewel gets both these nuances right - you have a perfect piece in front of you. It is a delight to look at, and it is a delight to wear.

Jewelry is Art. Making even the simplest piece of jewelry is laborious, technical, time-consuming and creative. In India, when did we stop acknowledging jewelry as an art form, and instead acknowledge it as a financial commodity? A sum of parts with a little component towards labour; and absolutely no regard to the creativity and thoughtfulness with which it has been made.

The Pundole's gallery space is a perfect venue to present Lightness of Being - A sale of JewelArt - fine jewelry selected by me from a host of jewelry talent across the country. This year, there will be an added emphasis on bridal jewels, precious gemstones and antique Indian jewelry.
