We are confident of the quality of all our house wines which we choose very carefully. These are wines which are particularly competitively priced but where there has been no compromise made with respect to quality. They are all young wines made by very well known producers, some of whom we have been working with for many years. These wines work well sold by the bottle or by the glass. Our bag-in-box wines are carefully chosen for quality. In 2020 many of our house wines are now vegan.

Cava is a Spanish sparkling wine made in the Traditional Method (the same method as Champagne). It is produced in several regions, but predominantly it comes from Catalonia where it was first commercially produced way back in 1872. It is generally accepted that the best Cava grapes come from the higher vineyards with limestone soils. Cava can be either white or rosé and once awarded the DO it will carry an identifying 4 point star. Espumoso is Spanish sparkling wine not DO Cava.

New Zealand's wine production may be small (only 10% of Bordeaux in volume) but its wines have a very loyal following. Cliff Edge comes from Marlborough in the north-east corner of South Island, New Zealand's largest and best known winegrowing area.

South African wines have been undergoing something of a change in recent years. Most wines come from the Cape of South Africa where the climate creates ideal conditions for the ripening of grapes and the production of some of the world's best wines. Fair-trade has become particularly important in the South African wine industry.

Chile Wines have been made in Chile since the 16th century. Though mostly planted with French grape varieties, the wine culture has been heavily influenced by French, Italian & Spanish winemakers over the years. Chile is free of Phylloxera, which allows vines to grow with their own roots having no need for grafting.

Italy has some of the oldest vineyards in the world. Italy is usually the biggest producer of wine in the world, although France does sometimes take that honour. Italian wines are always very fashionable, with Pinot Grigio wines selling particularly well. We have extended our Italian to include many new wines and regions to reflect the increased popularity of many of these fashionable wines.
