

THE NEXT GENERATION

There's no feeling like hooking a fish on a fly you tied yourself.

If you've experienced it, you know the sensation leads to lifelong obsession and constant dreams of your next fly design, your next fish, your next adventure.

We all have our own reasons for tying flies. For some of us, it's to express ourselves and explore the ranges of our creativity. For others, it's the ultimate meditation. Then there are those of us who tie because we need our flies tied precisely to spec to get an eat from the monster fish under the log jam at our local secret spot.

Why do you tie? Whatever your reason, building your fly off of a durable, purpose-designed base material is a must.

Flymen tying materials combine ease of tying with innovative design and top-notch performance on the water. From foam flies to streamers to nymphs, we have you covered for all levels of the water column.

Faux Bucktail Baitfish

Watch the tying video on the Faux Bucktail page on flymenfishingcompany.com

Hook: Streamer hook, #2 or #1. Body & Wing: Fish-Skull Faux Bucktail. Flash: Flashabou, silver.

Head: Fish-Skull Baitfish Head, small-medium. Eyes: Surface Seducer Dragon Eyes, 4 mm.

1. Cover hook shank with thread wraps.

2. Tie in white Faux Bucktail about 2x the hook shank length for the belly, leaving room at the hook eye to slide the Baitfish Head on later.

3. Tie in a few strands of flash and trim to same length as the Faux Bucktail.

4. Tie in Faux Bucktail of the same length for the top wing. Tie off your thread and whip finish. Apply super glue to the thread head.

5. Fit the Baitfish Head over the eye of the hook and position firmly in place.

6. Re-attach your tying thread in front of the Baitfish Head and tie a small thread dam between the head and the eye of the hook. Tie off.

7. Place the Dragon Eyes in the eye sockets and apply super glue or UV finish to hold them in place.

8. Go catch a big fish!
