

July
2006

First-Aid Kit Geared for Families

As parents, one of the things our job entails is constantly saving our children's lives, or so it seems. It's a steady stream of skinned knees, allergic reactions and broken bones. Does that mean we need to graduate from medical school before having kids? No, it just means you need to own a top-notch first-aid kit and take a good course in CPR.

Unfortunately, most of the pre-made first-aid kits don't have what you need to mend your children. A new kit, developed by a mom and dad, hopes to change that. Along with the usual bandages and antibiotic ointment, the Medibag includes useful items for family accidents. Based on research and family focus groups, here are some of the items that make this first-aid kit family friendly: quick-action, first-aid flip chart; CD that tells parents how to safety-proof a home; eye-wash to remove debris; insect sting relief pads; Kids QR (an item that instantly stops excessive bleeding); latex-free, powder-free blue exam gloves; and a bright-yellow babysitter pad for crucial family information. For more information, call 480-444-2332 or visit www.me4kidz.com.

