

Philadelphia Eagles player Jason Kelce delivered an epic speech about the team's journey to the Super Bowl during the team's victory parade after winning Super Bowl LII. He talked about the meaning of being an underdog and how it motivated the team to win. Kelce donned a green and gold costume with a dragon head on top, a look inspired by the Mummers Parade. The costume was a tribute to the underdog spirit of the Eagles and the city of Philadelphia, with the dragon head being nod to the Eagles' offensive line coach, Jeff Stoutland. Kelce's appearance was widely praised—becoming an instant social media sensation—and is now considered an iconic moment in Philadelphia sports history.