

A design for life

As well as children's fashion, Pearl Lowe has a Lifestyle collection of home products including her famous lace curtains, vintage textiles and her own range of candles. She's also an interior designer for private clients, when she specialises in her signature love of all things vintage - from clothing and textiles to furniture and decoration. Pearl has worked on homes owned by a host of famous names, all wanting their own version of her design philosophy.

After leaving school, she chose music over fashion and was the lead singer of '90s indie band Powder, during which time she had a baby and three more to follow. As her children grew up, Pearl wanted to carve out a career for herself that would provide her with more time with her children, so she returned to her original passion for design. Best known for her love of vintage interiors and fashion, Pearl has created her own unique design signature, which is both traditional yet brought up to date with elements that hint at glamour.

In 2001, she launched Pearl Lowe Interiors, selling lace curtains, cushions and bedspreads. Lace curtains led to lace dresses and in 2006, her designs were sold at Liberty and independent boutiques. In 2009, Pearl designed a capsule range of dresses for the high street chain Peacocks (which sold out within 24 hours).

In 2013, she launched her first interiors book, Pearl Lowe's Vintage Craft, which saw her bring her styling advice to a wider audience and also produced Sweetness and Light in 2014, a healthy eating recipe book with her eldest daughter, Daisy.

In October 2015, Pearl launched Petite, her luxury clothing collection for girls, at Harrods and 2016 sees the launch of Pearl Lowe Candles. In 2017, she plans to launch candles and fragrances for children as well as a range of soft furnishings.

Living in the beautiful Somerset countryside provides her with the perfect antidote to her hectic schedule. For the past 10 years, Pearl has lived in Frome with her musician husband Danny Goffey and three children and her beloved dogs, Brian and Angie.
