

2A Armament 22LR Ammunition Recommendations

This document is to provide our customers with information so they get the best possible shooting experience with our products. With variation in 22LR ammunition styles and design invariably some ammunition will run better than others. Bullet shape affects the transition from magazine to chamber. Our products are designed to perform across a broad cross section of available ammunition types, but in the end common lead round nose 22LR ammunition is generally most reliable. We do not recommend hollow points, 22 shorts; 22LR shot shells, or copper plated ammunition.

In addition to ammunition selection, 2A Armament magazines and regular cleaning is essential to reliable firearm function as well. 2A recommends thorough cleaning every 500 rounds. It is important to not grease or lubricate your 2A Armament 22LR bolt carrier, as lubricant in a 22LR will just thicken and gum up a dirty 22LR carrier. While other magazines are compatible (see compatibility link), 2A Armament magazines have been tuned to work better with our 22LR titanium bolt.

Ratings of common ammunitions as tested in our product development are provided below. We will continue to add to this list as more data becomes available. In addition, every rifle and complete upper assembly is functionally checked and tested before it ships from the factory.
