

Stamping the Rainbow in White by Kassi Hulet

Hello my fabulously creative friends!! Kassi here, and today I want to share a really fun technique using the LDRS Creative Snowy White hybrid ink that I stumbled upon by accident but have had SO much fun playing with that I had to share!

LDRS Creative Shopping list:

- Snowy White hybrid ink
- Raven hybrid ink
- Girl Power I
- Girl Power II

Most white ink pads on the market are pigment based. They are thick and creamy, and stamp boldly on dark colored papers. Which is great! However, LDRS Snowy White ink is a HYBRID ink, which gives it some interesting properties... One of which can be very frustrating if you aren't expecting it, but VERY FUN if you are expecting it, and let it work for you instead of against you.

Because of the chemical make-up of this hybrid ink, it reacts with alcohol ink when it is wet. When it is dry, it's safe to color over with alcohol markers, but it reactivates the alcohol ink when the hybrid ink is wet (similar to stamping water over top of a water-based ink)

Depending on your alcohol ink (and the color of your ink apparently) it will leave either a bleached out image, or just a super subtle tone-on-tone image as the alcohol ink tints the white ink. The stamp also picks up some of the alcohol ink color you stamped on.

* PLEASE note that!! If you stamp on top of alcohol ink, be sure to clean your stamp before touching your ink pad again so you don't contaminate your pad!

To start, gather your supplies so they are all on hand so you can work quickly... You'll need:

The project you want to stamp on (to find out how I made the bubbled alcohol ink background I'm using for this project, click HERE)

An alcohol ink background to act as your palette (you can do a marbled look like mine, or stripes, or whatever!)(The stamp you want to use LDRS Creative Snowy White Hybrid ink .

Ink up your stamp with Snowy White hybrid ink, and stamp it onto your palette background... The idea here is you WANT to pick up the colored ink... keep that in mind when you choose where to stamp.

Immediately stamp onto your project. Don't clean your stamp, don't re-ink your stamp. Just stamp.

The result is a soft chalky version of whatever colors you stamped over on your palette. How fun is that?!?!
Now, I know I used fairly subtle color combos here, so it's hard to see the marbled color on the stamps...

Kassi LittleDarlingRubberStamps.com
kassicreations.blogspot.com L•D•R•S creative

Check out what happens when you use bolder colors...
Isn't that BEAUTIFUL??? Just think of the fun rainbow effects that you could get!!
And if you make stripes or plaid background instead of a marbled one... You would stamp that pattern!!!
There are SO many possibilities!

To finish up my design, I stamped some stars and my sentiment using LDRS Raven ink Remember to HEAT SET these inks if you are working on any other non-porous surface!

Kassi LittleDarlingRubberStamps.com
kassicreations.blogspot.com L•D•R•S creative