

Philodendron Birkin

Philodendron erubescens 'Birkin'

The Philodendron Birkin is ubiquitous at this point, and it's not hard to see why -- with huge, glossy leaves boldly striped with white, this self-heading philodendron, sibling of the possibly even more famous Pink Princess, is bold and bushy as it grows larger!

@plantdaddyYQG

LIGHTING

You need to find a good balance here -- too little light will result in all-green leaves, but too much and they'll come out all-white!

WATERING

Like most Philodendrons, your Birkin has medium watering needs -- let the top $\frac{1}{3}$ or so of the substrate dry out before watering it again!

HUMIDITY

Philodendron Birkin is pretty adaptable as far as humidity goes -- it will appreciate higher humidity, but it's okay with less!

FUN FACTS

This same species has given us at least half a dozen well-known cultivars, with a wide array of colours and growth habits!

