

THIS ETHICS WEBINAR BUNDLE CONTAINS:

ETHICS AND INFORMED CONSENT OF THE PEDIATRIC POPULATION

Instructor: Rebecca Propper, MD

Description: What is informed consent? We will define the principles of informed consent and understand why it is crucial to autonomous decision making. We will review language and communication to ensure the voluntary nature of participation and why that is critical. We will break down the ethical and legal implications and how informed consent changes in the pediatric population. Communication between a provider or clinician and a patient is a major pillar in informed consent. We will discuss how communication is crucial in specific case examples as we interpret and discuss informed consent in the pediatric population.

Learner Outcomes:

- Define Informed Consent.
- Describe when one needs to obtain informed consent.
- Summarize how to obtain full informed consent and adequate disclosure of risk.
- Explain how informed consent differs in the pediatric population.

DECISION MAKING CAPACITY

Instructor: Teresa A. Savage, PhD, RN

Description: This on-demand webinar will focus on what decision-making capacity is and how to assess a patient's capacity to make a health care decision. Many patients in rehabilitation have conditions that could impair their decision-making capabilities. Some of these conditions were present prior to their illness or injury, such as health literacy, intellectual/developmental disability or mental health issues, but some are acquired, such as brain injury. Surrogate decision-making will also be discussed.

Learner Outcomes:

- Summarize the process of assessing decision-making capacity
- Define principles of Grisso & Appelbaum's assessment tools
- List tools for assessing decision-making capacity of adults in a health care setting
- Recognize clinical context, the "sliding scale" nature of capacity and the gravity of the decision in relation to the capacity to consent
