

INCONTINENCE PRODUCTS

A SIMPLE GUIDE

Products for both types of incontinence range in varying degrees of absorbency. There are also other factors to consider when picking a product such as how active you or the patient are, the size needed, price, comfort, and of course personal preference.

PULL UPS

More for active individuals with a heavier level of incontinence. They can be disposable or reusable, but are a way to be discreet and get the level of protection you need. They slip on and off like regular underwear and are available for both daytime and overnight use.

DIAPERS AND BRIEFS

Much like pads, they're made for heavier incontinence levels, but they're made for both urinary and fecal incontinence. They fasten on sides much like baby diapers, and can also come in sizes for bariatric briefs.

Pads

Diaper Doubler

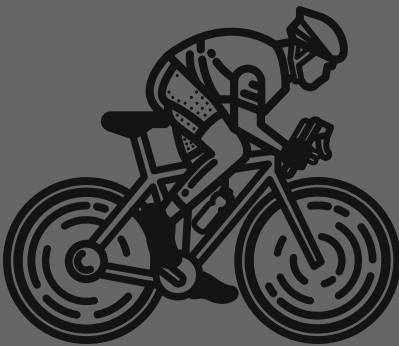

PADS AND LINERS

Much like menstrual pads these items are worn on the inside of regular underwear. They're made for lighter incontinence levels, and for mobile individuals;both men and women. There are also boosters that can be put inside briefs and pullups for extra absorbency, these are also called diaper doublers.

ACTIVE VS INACTIVE

Just as it sounds. Active individuals are mobile while inactive are those who are bedridden or have limited mobility. Each need different products and care.

SIZING AND PRICING

Briefs and pull ups are sized by the waist and hips. The product should describe small medium and large based off these measurements.It's important to keep in mind that higher absorbency level products may cost more, as well as products that are geared for different types of incontinence (ie; fecal vs urinary). However, the higher the absorbency level, the less you'll have to use. Make sure to match your needs correctly!

COMFORT AND PERSONAL PREFERENCES

Comfort is the ultimate goal here. Trying different products to find the one that will work best for you or the patient is essential. Which is also why personal preferences are so important when finding a product. Here at Myku Medical, we offer the choice to order samples. So you can try products at will, without having to buy a whole pack.
