Has pleasure in inviting you to the opening

Once Upon A Time There Was A Man

He tries to change his world to suit himself and then becomes disengaged from the natural cycles of life.
He constructs the scene because he can.
He fails to accept things for what they are,
because his genetic handicap makes him want to "do it better". Better than nature.
He sees himself as the king of all species.
He refuses to evolve and can't see past his immediate needs.
He can't control his urge to worship himself or something in "his" own image.

"Our quest for power gets mixed up with our ethereal demands, as we trip and stumble into the new world of mixed cultures and beliefs, refusing to accept our mortality and our similarity to all men and women regardless of race.

We forget our compassion, and ignore the fact that we are all in the same boat."
