Questions to Guide Your Observation

• What is your child doing when they are most able to focus? (Especially pertinent if you have an active child.)

• What type of activity seems to capture their attention the most?

• What do they spend the most time doing when they're allowed to freely choose an activity?

• If a conflict arises between you and your child or between your child and a peer or sibling, what is the conflict about? Does the same type of conflict occur frequently?

• What type of activity least interests your child?

• What is going on when your child becomes frustrated? (In other words, what type of activity are they doing when they become frustrated?)
