AVOID GLASS FAILURE ON POOL INSTALLATIONS

What is a movement or expansion joint?

Pools and other submerged areas with glass mosaic tile require a movement or expansion joint every eight to twelve feet, within the waterline, at corners, at the top of the waterline and raised tiled areas where they meet dissimilar materials, such as decking or pool coping.

Why Expansion Joints?

The concern with glass failure, also known as cracking or spalling, arises when the color-body of the glass heats up and is directly faced with the hot summer sun causing the glass to expand. The major cause is that the cement wall or beam of the pool will not expand proportionately at the same rate as the glass. (Note: color in glass is made through the addition of metal oxides; examples are: Iron, Copper, Nickel, Manganese, Cobalt and Chromium).

Glass tile does expand and contract more than ceramic and porcelain tile. This movement needs to be accommodated during the installation. Thus, the industry standard for any pool tile glass installation requires a movement or expansion joint around the entire perimeter of waterline below the coping, as well as every eight to twelve lineal feet on the waterline and at all corners. This also includes any skimmers, water features and directly over any joints in the concrete shell.

For the movement joint, utilize a flexible sealant recommended for submerged applications. Aquatica recommends high quality 100% silicone caulk. [Do not use acrylic as it will not stand up in a pool environment].

The most important movement joint is where the glass material meets the coping or the decking! While this recommendation is standard installation procedure for all exterior installations, it is frequently ignored.

It is CRITICAL to follow the TCNA guidelines with ALL Glass Tile Installation:

Use only highly modified Thinset approved for Glass Tile Installation

Do not install glass with color body without adhering to these guidelines. Use Constitutes Acceptance.

Note: Optional Waterproofing / Crack Suppression can also help prevent the Efflorescence commonly seen on failures. Contact your setting material manufacturer for further information.

Movement (Expansion) joints are required to comply with TCNA method EJ 171
