DAKOTA JACKSON

Integrity and the quest for impeccable elegance in design have been the guiding principles during my 50 years in creating and manufacturing fine furniture. In the early 70's the drive was to become a true "House of Furniture" where the experienced designer, like the choreographer created the intricate ballet of fabrication. I hand built my factories, a theatre where trained craftspeople, quality materials, hand work and machinery moved with synchronicity within the dance of production. A line on paper drawn in the studio came to life on the factory floor. Every completed piece was destined to become a treasured possession.

Today the "House" that Jackson built continues to embody those founding principles. The company has expanded in many directions: exciting new products, market sectors, international distribution and amongst other endeavors our ongoing collaboration beginning in 1998 with Steinway and Sons, the unparalleled House of Pianos. We have fostered good will through understanding the needs and working closely with our clients - the design professionals. Above all, I have always upheld my commitment to producing the finest work.
