Selena Gomez has been turning heads in New York this week as she makes the rounds to promote two new singles after a brief hiatus from music. On Monday, she refreshed a classic suit by making a surprising shoe choice. Last night, Gomez hit the streets once again to show off a very spiffy set of loungewear by an emerging label.

The star chose a pinstriped two piece by LeSet, the Los Angeles-based brand specializing in chic basics. Although the label by Lili Chemla launched this month, Gomez has already given it her celebrity endorsement twice this week. This latest fit saw Gomez in a Spring 2020 design from LeSet that will be available in February—a mix between a suit silhouette and pajama material. She styled the outfit with crisp white low-top sneakers and Jennifer Fisher hoops. So it's official: yes, you can wear loungewear out of the house—but only if it looks this good.
