Art Prodigy Evan Sharma To Debut Spring Streetwear Collection

LEVAR THOMAS · FEBRUARY 22, 2019 · 2 MINUTE READ

There is art that is nice to look at, and then there is art that influences you somehow. It makes you laugh, cry, remember someone special, or makes you take out a small loan to own it. Evan Sharma is an artist that creates thought provoking pieces like this that draw you into his world.

His inspiration comes from his being raised in Canada's rustic landscape, as well as the time he has spent in the urban areas of major cities. You will definitely find Evan's art interesting at first sight, and you will become enamored with his art once you find that he is just 14 years old.

Evan is being touted as the next Basquiat and it is easy to see why. The interpretive photos, he has created since the age of 12, burst with vivid colors, thick textures, and a bit of stoicism that is beyond his years.

He reports that he has been in love with art all of his life, and early on, focused on technical aspects of art. Now he fuses his technical skill with heart guided emotion like the master artists Da Vinci, Van Gogh, Basquiat, and Picasso, all of which he studied before becoming an artist himself.

Evan Sharma - An Artists Journey

The prodigy is also the youngest ever to show in Toronto's Artist Project Art Fair. News of his work has spread through national media outlets, and has helped to raise lots of money for charities like the United Way. He refers to himself as an "in the moment" painter and many of his works reside in the private collections of art buyers in the US, Europe, and Canada.

Possibly even cooler, Evan is also taking his neo-expressionist art to the realm of fashion by reproducing his art work on sneakers, and other street wear. He is excited to be releasing a Spring streetwear collection under his RBLB label, that features his style of art, and his streetwise style of dress.

It is very exciting to see a young person such as Evan navigating the avenues of art and business into the future. Take a look at the refreshing artwork of Evan Sharma, and we invite you to learn more about him at his very own online gallery at EvanSharma.com.

Thank you Julia Lang for the heads up on Evan!
