The Client Experience: Avoiding Nightmare Clients & Clear Policies
Episode #54 with Teryn Darling

In this episode of Tatter-a-fact® PMU Podcast I pick up where I left off with the Client Experience; this time: Nightmare Clients and Clear Policies! It can be hard to listen to your gut as a young artist, so listen closely as I share my experiences on trusting your instincts to avoid problem clients. I explain the importance of transparent pricing, helping you navigate the complexities of procedure costs, touch-ups, and policies, ensuring clarity and fairness for both you and your clients.

What we do can be extremely stressful even with the most wonderful client; in this episode I touch on the cruciality of and how to avoid the nightmare client. We enter a journey with every client we take on so it's significant to be able to identify client red flags and manage constant complainers.

Join me as I discuss the challenges of addressing late clients, establishing policies, and how to correctly provide a refund. I'll also share insights on how to respond to bad reviews, turning them into opportunities for growth and building a stellar reputation! This episode will pick up right where we left off and will be an informative companion episode to #53.

Let's give that bottle a good ol' dance!

Listen up! If you're not bustin' out some serious shakes for a solid 30 seconds, you're potentially leaving residual color settled at the bottom. We don't want that! We want our pigments to be full strength and jam-packed with vibrant, mouthwatering color.

When you performing procedures with pigment that hasn't been shaken properly, your color is mainly composed of sterile water, glycerin, and alcohol. Not on our watch! We strive for procedures that showcase the vibrant strength and irresistible allure of thoroughly mixed pigment.

To get that true tone, first twist off that cap. To avoid getting any pigment on yourself, slip on some gloves or grab a tissue before you start shakin' that bottle. Shake it, baby, shake it!

And remember, always ditch that cap to avoid wasting pigment and making a hot mess of your bottle.
