FAIR'S FAIR

At the heart of the Selvedge story is a cerebral and sensual addiction to textiles and, with that, an appreciation of the beautifully made and the carefully considered. This month, the Selvedge seasonal spring fair will come to the Bath Assembly Rooms where it will take over the 18th century Tea Room for one day only and will bring together some of the finest UK-based merchants and makers selling their rare fabrics and material treasures. The craft fair – the fifth they've held in Bath, having previously set up shop at the Octagon and The American Museum – will feature around 50 artisans and designers exhibiting their work, and as it's open ahead of Mother's Day there might be a chance to find a perfect gift there.

As the Assembly Rooms are also home to the Fashion Museum, which will be showing their newest exhibition, Lace in Fashion, the Selvedge team will also run a series of textile-inspired events and behind-the-scene tours of the museum in addition to offering visitors fabric flower workshops inspired by Natalie Chanin of Alabama Chanin – the US-based ethical textile and slow fashion movement.

The Selvedge Fair will visit Bath Assembly Rooms on Bennett Street, Bath, on 25 March. For more, and to book, visit www.selvedge.org
