Gone are the days of harsh chemicals that are bad for not only the planet but also your health. Being eco-friendly in your day-to-day is actually easier than many make it out to be - especially within your home cleaning routine.

What makes a cleaning product eco-friendly?

First thing's first, differentiating whether a product is truly eco-friendly.

Eco-friendly means product formulas must be plant-based and non-toxic in order to prevent air, water and land pollution. Coupled with this is the use of eco-friendly packaging, this can be in the form of biodegradable, recycled or reusable packaging to reduce waste going into landfill.

If you're looking at brushes and cleaning utensils, look for ones that are biodegradable or made from recycled materials at its minimum - some cleaning tools can be completely natural too which is even better.
