Nail-Aid Introduces New Spray Nail Polish Remover By: ParentingInProgress.net

Having all daughters there is a lot of nail polish that happens in this home. It seems like someone is always in need of nail polish remover but my kiddos are so sloppy I hate to give it to them. They always seem to overuse or spill it. Then I saw Spray Away from Nail-Aid. They have introduced the first spray nail polish remover. It comes in an aerosol can that you can easily use to remove your nail polish with no fuss or mess. We just tried it out and we love it.

Not only is it less messy the special formula leaves your the skin around your nails hydrated and moisturized. So you can kill two birds with one stone. While you are removing your nail polish treat your skin at the same time. Unlike other removers that use water to dilute the harsh effects of acetone, Spray Away uses aerosol technology to marry acetone and other moisturizing ingredients such as keratin and collagen, which would not be possible with any other application (think oil and vinegar). Acetone is long to know to be most effective to remove polish, but now you could use it guilt-free without the repercussions on your nails!

With Spray Away, you can easily remove your nail polish in seconds. The bottle is spill proof which I love, no more messes with the children. It's a great replacement to other removers with harsh chemicals.
