

Painted tiles thrown into the sea.

This is the humble beginning of the May Came Home collection.

While studying art for a semester in Italy, designer Deborah Halperin spent the day by the sea with a friend. There, they spent hours searching for treasures. These ceramic bits had washed up onto the shore, worn down by the sand and water to create colorful and beautiful glazed stones.

The idea of taking a common material and transforming it into a treasure was the genesis for using enamel instead of gemstones in jewelry.

Inspiration is everywhere.

