

THE FIRST RESPONDER

NAUMD Members Stand Up To COVID-19

Armament Systems and Procedures

Tactical Batons • Restraints • Flashlights • Police Training

By Michael Hess, Armament Systems and Procedures (ASP)

Michael.Hess@asp-usa.com

In response to the global pandemic, law enforcement now require disposable restraints as part of their critical personal protective equipment. ASP rapidly responded with our ASP Tri-Fold Disposable Restraints COVID-19 Preparedness Bundle Program. Read our press release and our sales brochure.

As for the company itself, ASP was actually pretty well set up for this, as we already have remote workers around the world and use a wider variety of technology to support that. The crisis served to “amp that up” a bit, and forced us to make sure we were using the best possible tools. Coming out of this—although we are a very in-person company and want to stay that way—we expect to use things like video meetings and online training more frequently and effectively.

Those of us in the company who normally travel a lot are chomping at the bit to hit the road again. There are two areas where this is most critical: First, the tuition-free training courses that we provide for law enforcement around the world. This can't be done remotely and is such a critical part of our officer safety mission. Second, visiting our customers. We have a dedicated, full-time team of Sales Directors across the country and overseas, who have had their proverbial wings clipped. They can't wait to be traveling again, out in front of police agencies and the distributors who partner with ASP to serve them.