

Polar Fleece Toque with deep rolled cuff

Beginner Sewing Level - Unisex Design

Correction from Video - The back seam is what I mistakenly refer to as the "long" seam. That first seam to sew is the 17" back seam which is shorter in length than the length around your head. So sorry for the confusing description. Tori.

Cut a piece of polar fleece for your hat body that is larger than the measurement of your head circumference. You can measure your head circumference with a tape measure going around your head just above your ears and your eyebrows. I recommend adding 1/2 to 1 inch or 1.25 to 2.5 cm to this measurement for comfort as the toque has four layers of fabric around your head and ears. A bit larger is comfy. Depth of fleece is great at 17 inches or 44 cm for adults.

Assemble by trimming one of the joining paper edges to the red line and match the black circles. Tape the pages together or glue. Check your printer with the measurement blocks on the left side of the first page. Printer setting should be set to actual for both letter and A4 pages. The seam allowance of 3/8 inch or 1 cm is built into the pattern (body and top) but there is a gray outline around the top that you can cut around if you use a larger seam when sewing. Cut around this gray outline if making a hat for a larger head than the average female (22.5 inches or 57.5 cm) This piece will be used for other projects so copy on to firm paper for the fun ahead!
