Zen Encounters | 簡

the artist that paints peace

Yin Chua's artistic expression draws profound inspiration from the spiritual discipline of meditation and her affinity for nature. The Singaporean artist aspires to be known as "the artist that paints peace". Through her creations, Yin endeavors to disseminate the message of equanimity and self-love through her artistry.

Immersed in Zen philosophies, Yin embraces mindfulness teachings, viewing Zen more as an encompassing way of life rather than a religion. The exhibition, titled "Zen Encounters," serves as a testament to the myriad of transformative experiences Yin has undergone, which she seeks to translate into her artworks.

An introspective episode of a ten-day silent meditation retreat in 2016 stands as a good example. During this retreat, participants dedicated over ten hours each day to the observance of their breath, thoughts, and sensations, observing their ephemeral nature as they effortlessly "arose and passed away." This insightful encounter found expression in the recurrent motif of waves in her paintings, evident in the series titled "Calming Waves." Furthermore, an awe-inspiring expedition to the majestic Himalayas in the subsequent year, where Yin beheld the breathtaking sight of Mt. Everest and other towering peaks, ignited a deep appreciation for atmospheric mountains, which she poetically portrays in works such as "One Step at a Time."

These transformative encounters, distanced from the clamor of the fast-paced Singaporean urban landscape, have indelibly shaped Yin's artistic sensibilities, propelling her towards a minimalist lifestyle. This minimalist, pared-down approach is also a common theme that threads her work. With each meticulously crafted piece, Yin aspires to bestow upon the observer a serene aesthetic, infusing their surroundings with an aura of tranquility and beauty.

An abstract relief sculpture made of white material, possibly plaster or clay, set against a light gray background. The sculpture features a central, circular, concentric pattern resembling a ripple or a sunburst, surrounded by various textured, organic forms that suggest movement and depth. The overall composition is dynamic and three-dimensional.

Yin Chua

Yin has always dreamt of becoming an artist. In mid 2016, Yin finally made a gradual transition towards creating art. A major source of inspiration for her, both in life and art is the spiritual practice of meditation. She hopes to be able to 'paint peace' and bring a feeling of calmness or positivity to those viewing her paintings.
