The Best Face Masks for Reducing Redness

Struggling with redness this season? Same. And we're far from the only ones. The harsh winter weather has a tendency to take a serious toll on our skin, thanks to factors like wind and aggressively dry air leaving our complexions looking worse for wear. (And that doesn't even take into account the moisture-sucking central heating.) For those out there with easily irritated skin, this means redness is ever-present once winter hits, but whether it's just a seasonal skin woe or you happen to suffer from redness year-round, thankfully there are a slew of calming face masks on the market made specifically for inflamed skin. Ahead, find 11 of treatments — including a few expert recommendations — that really pass the redness-reducing test.

Alchimie Kantic Mask

Another must-have for Ingeborg, this creamy treatment mask is loaded with soothing botanicals, as well as oats and wild pansies, which are known to speed up the recovery of distressed skin. "[This one] is a multi-tasker that leaves the skin calm, smooth, firm, and even-toned," says the makeup artist. Need we say more?
