QUEST

JULY 2018

THE VOICE AND VISION OF GLEN RAVEN.

OFF THE GRID

Glen Raven held its sixth Innovation Summit in May and the takeaways were applicable not only to our guests but also to each of us, regardless of where we are physically located across the company's footprint.

The summit, which was streamed to all Glen Raven locations, exposed us to some incredible individuals who were inspiring and forward-thinking and whose intellectual horsepower was off the charts. If you did not join the conversation, I encourage you to watch the recap videos and see for yourself how a convergence of creative thinking and idea sharing can lead to your own personal and professional growth.

As you will read in this issue of Quest, the presenters urged us to explore what's possible when we unshackle our minds and reminded us that everyone has the potential to foster creativity and innovation. I hope you came away with an idea, regardless of size, that will help you achieve your vision for Glen Raven.

We are only as creative as we are innovative, and creativity usually comes when we are not thinking about it. Our best ideas often come when we are quietly off the grid, and with the summer season well underway, I encourage each of you to find time to unclutter your minds and renew and recharge as we transition between fiscal years. This will only make you, and Glen Raven, stronger.

BOATGIRL BRINGS STYLE, DURABILITY TO THE WATER

Leslie and Paige Temple are girls on the go. Whether boating, swimming or fishing, many of their activities center around the water. So when they were on a family vacation toting bags that fell over, couldn't hold all of their gear or ended up soaked through, they had an idea. Together, the pair created Boatgirl, a line of bags with exceptional design and style that can withstand harsh weather and water conditions with the help of Sunbrella® fabric.

"Leslie became a Trivantage® customer in January 2017 when she made her first order of Sunbrella fabric," said Scott Milroy, inside sales representative with Trivantage. "However, I first met her when I worked at a previous job. When I started working with Trivantage, we crossed paths again. Since then, I've watched her passion — and company — grow."

Each Boatgirl bag uses Sunbrella marine fabric to ensure it is both water- and fade-resistant. Bags are available in a variety of colorways and six sizes, from weekend bags to crossbody options.

"This application in particular is really unique and fun," Milroy said. "They use great colors and quality craftsmanship to offer something stylish but durable. We work with many clients in the marine, awning and industrial fields, but this is completely different. It's refreshing to work with them."

With summer in full swing, he added, now is the perfect time to invest in a bag that carries the design and performance promise of Sunbrella.

"I don't have one yet, but the Getaway or the Daytripper is something I can see my wife having," Milroy said. "They're all really cool and well-made — perfect for a day on the water."
