Side Note: About Preservatives

Some form of preservative system is essential to ensure products are safe for use. Preservatives present in most toiletries are designed to kill bacteria and fungi. However, few realise that they can potentially kill cells as well. Some companies, upon discerning this, turn to plant derived alcohol which is very drying to the skin, as a preservative. We have chosen to up the ante by creating totally preservative free products. We extend our products shelf lives through intelligent pairings of ingredients which serve to preserve each other.

Not all preservatives are harmful, but some potentially can cause cancer or various illnesses. Banned preservatives by ECOCERT are - parabens, phenoxyethanol, formaldehyde. Parabens have been found in human urine and breast tumor tissue (Darbre 2004; Ye 2006). Some are skin sensitizers or irritants (Schamberg 1967; Nagel 1977; Soni 2001, 2002; CIR 2006). The European Union banned use of sodium methylparaben in fragrance because it can depigment skin (SCCPNFP 1999, 2000). Lab studies link parabens to cancer and reproductive or hormone-disrupting effects (Ishidate 1978; Matsuoka 1979; Lemini 1997; Routledge 1998; Oishi 2001, 2002a, b; Darbre 2002, 2003; Kusakabe 2002; Mikula 2006).
