Cook As If You Grew the Food

For generations, the Fischer family has gathered for meals on their 5-acre Martha's Vineyard farm. Now, chef Chris Fischer has collected their recipes in "The Beetlebung Farm Cookbook." A veteran of acclaimed restaurant kitchens on both sides of the Atlantic, Mr. Fischer returned home to raise his own vegetables and livestock as his grandfather did, and he knows well how to make the best use of all the bounty his farm's fields and the nearby ocean provide. Whether it's a simple potato salad or a full-on lobster feast, this beautiful book and its envy-inducing photographs will bring a little New England-style rustic chic to any outdoor dinner party (and indoor ones, too). $35, Little, Brown and Company

Get Carried Away

Among his many talents, fashion designer Oscar de la Renta threw renowned dinners, where he would create table settings that married humble materials such as wicker and bamboo with antique china and crystal. Likewise, this tray pairs a

16th-century Turkish textile motif with woven rattan. And if the wind takes advantage of your rosé-compromised balance, the vinyl-coated surface wipes down easily. Octagonal Pinecone Print Tray, $395, oscardelarenta.com —Mieke ten Have

Take a Strand

Decorating with faux florals is generally a fast track to a party foul. But tole—in which leaves and buds are rendered in lacquered or enameled metalware—can be a sculptural antidote to synthetic flowers. This 69-inch garland strand, its elements hand-painted and rustically joined with wire, feels like a Parisian flea-market trove. Arrange it along a table as a centerpiece, or entwine with outdoor lights for a luminous botanical embellishment. Metallic Leaves Garland, $30, preorder at shopterrain.com —M.T.H.

Card Your Guests

Though assigned seating might seem too stuffy for your outdoor soiree, these place-card holders—unglazed-porcelain takes on strawberries by ceramist Michiko Shimada—playfully uphold a tradition that can effectively encourage strangers to interact, bonding as they gossip about you. And unlike the real thing, these berries will still look fresh long after the harvest is over. Strawberry Place-Card Holder, $15 each, michikoshimada.com —Kelly Michèle Guerotto

Chill a While

It's the little extras that set this cooler apart: the built-in bottle opener with integrated cap catcher, the handy trash-bag-holder loops, the LED lights that turn on when you lift the lid (or remove it entirely for tub-style access). It's built tall so that 2-liter bottles can stand upright without leaning, and a heavy-duty removable wheeled base makes for easy rolling, even when the cooler's full. Removable dividers let you separate alcohol from juice boxes (enforcement not included). Party Bar - Powered by LiddUp, $230, igloopartybar.com —Keith Blanchard
