

Labor Day 2020

Here in the United States of America, we celebrate Labor Day on Monday, September 7th. Labor Day was created to celebrate and dedicate the social and economic achievements of American workers. A day we pay tribute to the contributions workers have made to the strength, prosperity, and well-being of our great country.

In times like these, fear runs rampant and can steal your joy in an instant. This year (2020) has definitely been a 'laboring' year, but unlike any work we have ever seen... In fact, the pains of this year will likely be felt throughout many generations to come. Prosperity in this mess is definitely limited, but not out of reach.

We, the People, are fighters who stand back up after being knocked down. We shake the dust from our boots and find another way to win the battles laid out before us.

I believe a battle of this magnitude can only be won on our knees in prayer. Asking for guidance on which moves to make, for our families, jobs, and businesses.

This year, as we celebrate Labor Day, I challenge you to examine your heart, your direction, and what you are laboring for. Hard-working Americans built the backbone of this country once and, God willing, we will do it again.

Happy Labor Day friends.
