As much as I love summer, switching from shaving maybe once a week to almost every other day can be a pain. Especially because when I start shaving more frequently, my skin becomes a little more sensitive, and I find I need an aftershave to prevent razor burn and ingrown hairs. Unfortunately, a basic moisturizer just doesn't cut it for me when I shave on a regular basis. But as much as the lazy girl in me resists adding an extra step to my routine, I have to admit, a good aftershave is a must. And regardless if you prefer finding the best one on the market or whipping up your own home remedy, there are plenty of options for soothing your skin.

Granted, more often than not, aftershaves are marketed towards men. But don't let the gray and black packaging bum you out. The product inside will work just as well on you. And don't worry, aftershaves don't always have to be a pungent splash either. They can actually be much more convenient and in a cooling, gel or spray form for easier application. Trust me: This is one product you'll be happy you added to your hair-removal routine. Here are all of the aftershaves, whether pre-made or DIY that will help keep your legs smooth and free from bumps, burn, and ingrown hairs.
