The couple who grooms together, stays together? So might suggest Naomi Watts, 47, who recently told NewBeauty magazine that she and longtime partner Liev Schreiber, 48, both exfoliate once a week with Clarisonic facial cleansing devices.

With the exception of the brand's recently launched Alpha Fit model, which is specifically designed for a man's tougher skin and to effectively cleanse facial hair, Clarisonic devices are largely unisex. In fact, many men were introduced to the product by their significant other.

We're guessing Naomi and Liev don't share a single device (though they could by changing out the brush heads), there are plenty of amazing new unisex lotions, shampoos and even fragrances that they could buy just one of.

Below, a few we'd recommend - for them and you.

Not in a relationship - or into sharing? Stay with us because the latest in the gender-neutral product sphere are all-inclusive, relatively affordable and make shopping for skin and hair care less about packaging, marketing and scent and more about what really matters: results.

A trailblazing new brand to know is Context, founded by a male fashion executive who was in search of skin care with the efficacy of prestige women's products but without the high prices and strong, feminine fragrances.

Housed in sleek black and white tubes and jars, formulated with nourishing plant-based ingredients (and none of the bad stuff like parabens) and priced between $30 and $45, the company's seven-piece range is simple yet gets the job done.

One of the latest additions to Target's burgeoning skin care section is unisex brand Marlowe. Similar to Context, the packaging is black and white and the products contain a curated list of natural, skin-benefiting ingredients.
