Is your dopp kit getting smaller and smaller? It should be. Almost every grooming launch to cross my desk lately boasts multiple claims—so that a bottle of shampoo now touts conditioning benefits, and a moisturizer promises to be effective from head to toe.

Most of the time, I'm wary of products that try to do too much. I've found that it can be a recipe for a lot of mediocrity in a single package. These recent launches, though, deliver on their promises. Better yet, with Memorial Day weekend coming up, there's no better time to streamline your grooming essentials.

Below, six options that hold up. Pack one or pack them all—you'll still have plenty of room left over in the dopp kit.

Marlowe Men's Body Scrub and Wash

What you have here is essentially a heavy-duty shower gel, housing flecks of pumice suspended within a clear base. It's gentle enough to use regularly—definitely gentle enough to use throughout the holiday weekend. The pumice makes short work of dry skin and calluses, while a series of extracts (passionflower fruit, green tea, willow bark and deep sea algae) soothe and hydrate the skin. I like how this smells, too; it's clean and appealing, with notes of citrus and wood.
