"He seems to be a very opinionated baby, which I love, 'cause I'm extremely opinionated," says Yip (with Gavin in the nursery).

HGTV DESIGN STAR'S VERN YIP

NEW ADDITION

The interior designer tackles his most personal projects: fatherhood and decorating his son's nursery

Long before Vern Yip became a dad, he was decorating his baby's nursery—in his mind.

"For 4½ years," says the HGTV mainstay, "we were collecting things," including ceramic penguins from Canada and a silver elephant from Indonesia. "We'd acquire something new, and I'd move something in my head."

On Jan. 6 he and his partner added the most treasured piece of all: Gavin, who was born via a surrogate.

"Sometimes you can't believe this amazing person is now in your life," says Atlanta-based Yip, 41. And what if Gavin doesn't appreciate his earth-toned, globally inspired bedroom? "The most important thing is that he's happy," says Yip. "If what makes him happy is painting his room bright yellow, then that's what's going to happen."

"I didn't want to fill his room with kid stuff," says Yip, who chose pieces Gavin "can grow with."

Designer Nate Berkus accepted the challenge of turning part of Dratch's sole bedroom into a nursery for Eli after Dratch ran into one of his talk show's employees on the street in New York. "It came out really well," says Dratch. "It looks like a real, albeit tiny, room."

Max's World

It took interior design firm Woodson & Rummerfield's House of Design more than four months to create Max's nursery. The custom-made mural is inspired by TODA, one of Aguilera's favorite artists. It "brings a pop-culture feel to the room," says designer Patrick Ediger, who worked on Aguilera's mansion. Max's room is filled with items from hip baby boutique Bal Bambini, among them a Monte Designs Luca Glider chair, a collection of Uglydolls and a giant Ty Plush elephant. But Aguilera's favorite piece is an 11-ft.-tall moon brought back from her last tour. "The first time she saw the room, she was ecstatic," says Ediger. "She loves spending time in there." So does Bratman (below), who was the first person to change Max's diaper. "The parental instinct kicked in right away," he says. "And it hasn't gone away."
