What are Anal Glands?

Anal glands are two small glands (also referred to as anal sacs) located inside the anal opening of all dogs and cats. These glands normally release a small amount of a foul-smelling scent marking liquid every time your pet defecates. Many pets develop anal gland problems at some point in their lifetime requiring veterinary attention.

Reasons for using Glandex®

Glandex is helpful for pets with chronic anal sacculitis, pets requiring frequent anal gland expressing, pets that are susceptible to anal gland infections and/or abscesses, and as an alternative to anal saccullectomy. Glandex helps support cases of mild gastrointestinal upset and colitis.
