The Embellished Braid

I first saw this look on Shay Mitchell's Instagram, above. It's a row of tiny gold rings looped into a French braid—delicate but also cool. (Ask a friend for help at home!) Next I clicked over to her hairstylist Chris Appleton's account and discovered more ways to work in rings. For me: a multibraid look, accented with mini metal cuffs, right. —J.M.

The Belted Pony

Backstage at Tibi, it looked at first as if they were doing just another low-slung ponytail. Then I noticed hairstylist Frank Rizzieri fastening this long fabric over the base (over an elastic); it fell to the same length as the pony's end. And then I saw the buckle. I love belted anything—swimsuits, jumpsuits. Now, apparently, I'll be belting my hair too. —Julianne Carell, @juliannearell

15 B.O.M.B. Beauty

When vlogger Jackie Aina challenged the YouTube beauty community to post tutorials using only black-owned makeup brands (a.k.a. B.O.M.B.), she wanted contributions from all users. "Just because you don't wear the same foundation shade as me doesn't mean you can't rock a blush from Fashion Fair," she explains. "We must make room [for these brands]." Well, the Internet is paying attention. Search for the videos on YouTube and you'll find women of all skin tones playing with brands like Iman and Black Opal. My personal obsession: Black Up Mono Eyeshadow in OAP 11M ($20, sephora.com), an electric blue I wear as eyeliner. —K.E.
