Hundreds of Website Visitors Sign Up to Review New Bible Translation

Leawood, Kansas – October 9, 2017 – The Readable Bible, a new translation that presents the Scripture in modern formats, is attracting hundreds of Christian leaders and lay people who want to be involved in its development. When The Readable Bible editorial team decided to invite friends and business contacts to proofread and comment on pre-publication proofs, they expected the normal one- to two-percent response. Over 80 people signed up.

Next, the team opened up the review process to website visitors. Over 25 percent have been signing up each week and the list has grown to close to 300. Pastors, professors, ministry leaders and Christians from all walks of life are joining together to help make The Readable Bible the most readable Bible ever.

Lisa Parnell, managing editor of The Readable Bible, says “After filtering out repetitious comments and corrections, we have hundreds of comments worth considering for each Bible book.”

Rodney S. Laughlin, founder of The Readable Bible, said, “Though it will slow down the process some, the quality of comments demands that we consider them and use them to increase both the readability and approachability of The Readable Bible. We are thrilled that so many people know so much about God’s Word and want to contribute to an edition in modern formats.”

About The Readable Bible

The Readable Bible is Scripture in today’s formats, the way it would look if Moses, David, Paul and the other recorders of Scripture were sitting at a computer when God spoke to them. It is primarily a word-for-word translation with footnoted thought-for-thought translations when needed for easier readability. Unlike most Bibles that present text in difficult-to-read paragraph blocks, The Readable Bible presents the 27 types of information in Scripture in 17 modern formats, making the Bible as readable and approachable as any popular nonfiction book.
