Readable Bible Invites Public to Speak Into New Bible Version

Leawood, Kansas – September 11, 2017 – The Readable Bible is inviting the public to comment on the readability of its new translation. Those who elect to do this are considered part of the “volunteer development team.” Development team members proofread pre-publication PDFs of individual Bible books. In return for their help, they will receive a free copy of each Bible book they reviewed when it’s published.

Most proofers find it an honor to be involved in the project. “I’m amazed at the responses we are getting,” said Rod Laughlin, founder of The Readable Bible. “People consider it a privilege to help perfect this Bible and make it the best it can be.”

About The Readable Bible

The Readable Bible is Scripture in today’s formats, the way it would look if Moses, David, Paul and the other recorders of Scripture were sitting at a computer when God spoke to them. It is primarily a word-for-word translation with footnoted thought-for-thought translations when needed for easier readability. Unlike most Bibles that present text in difficult-to-read paragraph blocks, The Readable Bible presents the 27 types of information in Scripture in 17 modern formats, making the Bible as readable and approachable as any popular nonfiction book.

About Rod Laughlin

Rod Laughlin holds a Master of Divinity degree from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. He has served the Lord as a Christian businessman, pastor and Bible teacher. Today his primary work is leading the development of The Readable Bible.
