Beauty editor JEAN GODFREY-JUNE loves Greek yogurt, Liberty-print anything and old-school aviators.

You know how it's fun at first, picking out glasses (sun- or otherwise)? And then you get down to the definitely-maybes and it becomes a horrible moment of mirrors and indecision? I leave feeling both hideous and like I picked the wrong ones.

But now at Lenscrafters, you do the fun shopping part, then they take your picture in your potential choices. The lighting is flattering; the screen shows four choices at a time, making it easy to contrast and compare. You leave knowing you made the right choice, feeling decidedly prettier.

Like Kate Moss, you'll always know you're looking your hottest!

Ray-Ban aviators, $145, sunglasshut.com

My insanity for a tiny floral print never, ever dies. Slap it on an ill-fitting bathing suit in a fabric that can't even get wet and I will pay top dollar. I don't care. I just love it. If I go to heaven, I will surely possess the power to say, "Make it in Liberty print!" re all things: I will sleep in a Liberty-print bed, I will scamper around (my body, of course, perfect) in Liberty-print underwear, before jumping into my Liberty-print ball gown and running through the fields of still more tiny flowers.

The tiny floral print of these hair ties is actually by Zac Posen, and I cannot resist them. They come free (free!) when you buy a box of John Frieda foam haircolor (which blends better than anything, does not drip and leaves your hair shiny, bouncy and gorgeous) (über-colorist Harry Josh dyed several models' hair backstage at the Zac Posen show—it's that easy), or you can buy them for $8.

John Frieda Runway Style Collection Limited Edition hair ties, $8 for pack, or free with John Frieda Precision Foam Colour, $15, target.com

Korres Greek Yoghurt Advanced Nourishing Sleeping Facial, $45, sephora.com

I have always loathed facials, sad to say. Caveat: There do exist rare supreme beings—Sonya Dakar and Tammy Fender among them—who can truly beautify your skin. But in general, a facial takes forever and costs a lot, and the aesthetician criticizes your skin, then tries doggedly to sell you 17 million expensive products.

I have also always loathed mayonnaise, so Greek yogurt has improved my life beyond the low-calorie/good-for-you aspect: It holds things like salads and sandwiches together deliciously.* This yogurt mask is so fabulously Euro, I think—summery in its coolingness and, of course, packed with nutrients, probiotics, etc. You put it on, it feels thick and cool and smells addictively of yogurt, you go to sleep (it sinks right in and ruins no sheets, Liberty-print or otherwise), you wake up glowy and dewy.

 Dressing That Makes All Vegetables Instantly Delicious:

Mix Greek yogurt with crushed garlic and sea salt. C'est ça! It makes any chopped vegetable into an amazing salad; poured over avocados, it is absolutely transcendent.
