

This Is How Much 8 Celebrities Spend On Their Skin-Care Routines

Forget diamonds, skincare is really a girl's best friend. Especially if you're a girl who also happens to be a major celebrity. After all, you're constantly photographed and filmed—it's your job to put your best face forward! We investigated the routines of the most beauty-obsessed A-listers to see the products they love and the treatments they swear by, and put together an estimate on how much their go-to skin-care routines actually cost. One thing is clear: Keeping your face and body red carpet-ready comes with a hefty price tag.

- $500 oxygen facials: Paltrow told Harper's Bazaar about her regular visits to the Los Angeles-based facialist Sonya Dakar: "I love her Organic Omega Booster serum. I try to go once a week now that I live in L.A. I think facials really help with staying young." Her go-to is the oxygen facial, and the Organic Omega Booster is $52 (sonyadakarskinclinic.com).

• $2,500 Thermage treatments: Always one to try anything in the name of anti-aging, it's been reported by Charlotte's Book that Paltrow has experimented with Thermage. What exactly is Thermage? "It's a device that emits radio frequency energy to improve skin texture and elasticity. It heats up collagen in the skin, loosening up at structure, and allowing it to reform in a tighter more healthy configuration as the skin heals," says Zeichner. "It can also help stimulate new collagen production." While it may sound like a good way keep her complexion youthful, even Paltrow admits how painful it can be, warning that it feels "like you're being smacked with an electric band," she told Hello! Magazine.

Paltrow also launched a skincare line in 2016 with Juice Beauty and shared her favorite products with the New York Times. Everyday she uses the revitalizing day moisturizer ($100, shop.goop.com), enriching face oil ($110, shop.goop.com), perfecting eye cream ($90, shop.goop.com), and replenishing night cream ($140, shop.goop.com). She also loves the instant facial ($125, shop.goop.com) for a tingly skin pick-me-up. She also talked about some non-Goop indulgences that include Drunk Elephant's Umbra Sheer Defense SPF 30 ($38, drunkelephant.com), Tammy Fender's Bulgarian Lavender Body Oil ($65, amazon.com), The Organic Pharmacy's Rose and Jasmine Body Oil ($66, barneys.com) and Ursa Major's Face Wipes ($24 for 20 wipes, amazon.com).