

Perfectly imperfect

Mumbai-born textile designer Mili Suleman works to ensure that handloom weaving endures. Kufri, her Dallas-based company, employs female and aging artisans in India to create her highly textural fabric lines. Slight variations in weave and dyes enhance the delicate details, such as those in the Kyra cotton napkins in Moss; $65, set of four; Tula placemats in Selva express the natural ebb and flow in wilderness, $65, set of four; and Sanjana Stripe napkins pull in a sea blue. The earthy Cusco Stripe runner in Terracotta pulls any tabletop together, $180. Other colors available, sold online only, kufrilifefabrics.com.

Practical Beauty

For textile addicts like us, there is no such thing as too much tabletop linen. As for kitchen towels, we simply can't get enough of them. Add an artisanal or earth-friendly component and we cannot look the other way. Hand-loomed or embroidered. Locally designed. Pretty and useful. We're in.

Personal elegance

Sevargo, christened with a mashup of owner/designer Andi Severin Goins' names, is known as a go-to for customized party supplies, from cups to napkins to invitations.

Now in a shop of her own, Goins tiptoes into home goods, from pillows to decor, featuring her artwork. We love it all but remain devoted to her monogrammed (14-plus styles) napkins. Joining the rainbow of cocktail options, these linenlike hand towels perfect for guest bathrooms also can be printed in metallic gold, silver, copper and rose gold. $54, set of 50. Drop by the shop and follow Goins on Instagram @sevargo. 4829 Camp Bowie Blvd., Fort Worth, 817-368-2634, sevargo.com.

Soft touch

Recently we read about a couple who quit their day jobs to start a farm that produces sustainable handmade products. Photos of happy animals, including Babydoll sheep, made us smile. Then we saw the 1818 Farms textiles line and squealed. We are kind of crazy about flour-sack towels. Too, we are devoted to Swedish dishcloths made of absorbent natural fibers that soak up spills, clean streak-free and can be used several times before washing, $6.50 each. Bye-bye paper towels. The extra-soft 100 percent cotton flour-sack three-towel set features the farm's 1965 flower truck and two of the fresh flowers grown on the property, $26/set. Sold online at 1818farms.com.

A delightful twofor: Loveria Caffé owners Andrea Matteucci and Stefania Bertozzi are dealers of Venini, Murano glass art pieces.

Glass act

You don't need to travel to Venice to acquire beautiful Italian art glass. A surprising source for colorful handmade Murano art pieces, chandeliers and more exists right here in Colleyville. The husband-wife architect team of Andrea Matteucci and Stefania Bertozzi, owners of Loveria Caffé, are certified dealers of the exquisite works from the company called Venini. An emporium within their contemporary trattoria features a few examples of Venini creations, some replicating delicate 1920s designs and others strikingly more modern. Color is a common bond, most vivid and bold. Choices abound in vases, bottles, dishes and other objets d'art (starting at about $300), and there's a broad catalog selection of large and small art light works (from about $1,300). Each piece is individually crafted and can be customized. As design experts, Matteucci and Bertozzi make good consultants; visit them at 5615 Colleyville Blvd., Suite 410, Colleyville, 817-893-5880, loveriacaffe.com and see a sampling of works at venini.com. — June Naylor
