It's in our Nature

A million wildlife species are facing the threat of extinction. But why does this matter to a tiny city state like Singapore? What do we stand to lose if our wildlife go extinct?

Host Lam Shushan comes face to face with some of the rarest creatures in the world and meets the tenacious frontliners who are racing to save our native wildlife from extinction.

Narrator: Lam Shu Shan

一百万种野生动植物正面临灭绝的威胁，但这跟新加坡这个蕞尔小国有什么关系呢？如果我们的野生动植物灭绝了，我们又会面对什么样的损失？看主持人Lam Shushan与世界最稀有的生物面对面接触，并奋力拯救本土野生动植物免于灭绝的顽强前线人员会面。

EP1: It's in our Nature: Losing our Biodiversity

In just 2 centuries, we've lost almost a third of our native wildlife but why does it matter if more of our wildlife goes extinct? We've got more than 40,000 animal and plant species, including some species found nowhere else in the world. What do we stand to lose if our native flora and fauna disappear forever?

EP2: It's in our Nature: Saving our Wildlife

As we clear more forests to make way for urban development, what can we do to make sure we don't lose more of our wildlife? Is it already too late, and can a tiny city state like Singapore play a part in preserving the planet's biodiversity? We follow the men and women in the frontline of our fight to save our wildlife.
