Locally made glass bowls that give back

Last fall, Melissa Brooks and Jillian Darling launched Serve Kindness as a way to combine their shared interests in art and philanthropy.

The company works with master glass blowers at a studio in Essex to produce cheerful, hand-blown glass bowls made from multiple layers of clear and brightly colored glass. Each piece is white on the outside with a single vibrant hue on the interior. Nested sets in striking combos make perfect presents. Most importantly, the duo partners with charities, donating a portion of sales to those they say “serve kindness in their communities.” The customer chooses which one at checkout. From $39 at servekindness.com
