

ANNA PIERRI is a native of Toronto but left the city after a 30-year career in the food retail industry, event planning, and healthcare marketplace to pursue her dream of country living. She now lives in Caledon, Ontario – with her little blind Miniature Schnauzer, George – where the local wildlife, and especially the mice, give her daily inspiration for her writing. An avid storyteller from a young age, Pierri realized her dream of becoming an author with the Buster Bartholomew Benjamin Brown series. Her passion for storytelling and writing for children inspired her to also hang out a shingle as a children’s book publisher. She is the founder of Ruby Two Shoes Publishing Inc. (rubytwoshoespublishing.com), whose mandate is to provide exciting, imaginative, and interesting literature to stimulate children’s minds. She is an active member of the Canadian Society of Children’s Authors, Illustrators and Performers, the Society of Children’s Book Writers and Illustrators (Canada East), and the Canadian Children’s Book Centre, and she regularly visits classrooms, bookstores, and festivals across Southern Ontario, reading her book to children, introducing them to Buster and his friends, and spreading positive messaging about bullying.

STEVE SLAWICH, originally from Brantford, Ontario, has been doing freelance illustration and cartooning since graduating with honours from Sheridan College in 1992 from the Classical Animation program. He has done licensed and original design work for book publishers and toy and marketing companies. His vibrant and timeless artwork in the Buster series draws from his years of cartooning experience and working with licensed children’s products for companies like Nelvana and Disney Studios, where he had a six-year, full-time stint drawing another famous mouse. He is just as comfortable behind a computer doing illustration and graphic design as he is holding a pencil or sculpting maquettes. Slawich currently lives with his wife and son in Huntersville, North Carolina.
